I've done all of it except the loop part. Any help would be highly appreciated. A: you could use this data structure for it: var students = []; $.getJSON('TEST.json', function(json) { $.each(json, function(key, value) { students.push({ name: value.name, level: value.level, age: value.age }); }); }); Then with this structure you can print out the values just like so: console.log(students); Recently, as the semiconductor industry has developed, the degree of integration of semiconductor elements has been increased and the circuit line width has been reduced. The decrease in circuit line width, however, has resulted in an increase in mutual capacity and difficulty in arranging interconnection lines. In addition, in order to secure reliability of elements, a sealing agent should be applied to prevent
